What are conditions under which light behaves like a particle or as an electromagnetic wave And it behaves like wave if you how light behaves both as a wave. Thus began a controversy that still rumbles on today?and it s easy to see why In some ways light behaves just like a wave light reflects off a mirror. Light has have wavelengths across the electromagnetic spectrum Very little of this spectrum can actually be seen So it behaves like a wave in that it can be decoded in the case of visible light by your eyes and turned into a useful information by your brain.

In this series of games your students will learn how light behaves like a wave The Wave Model of Light learning objective ? based on NGSS and state standards ? delivers improved student engagement and academic performance in your classroom as demonstrated by research.

Simulation of a particle wave function double slit experiment that elementary particles are spread through space like waves made as if a light wave. Light is one of nature's ways of moving energy from one place to another. It has no substance or mass. How does light travel? Light behaves like a traveling wave, something like waves in a string or on the surface of water. The wave-like behaviour of light can be seen clearly when sunlight is refracted through a prism and splits into the different colours. This shows how it behaves like a wave.
