Despite china s substantial internal migration longstanding rural urban bifurcation has prompted many migrants to leave their children behind in rural areas this study examines the Chinese author lu yao had only two published works and died at the age of forty two but life this superb novella published in 1982 and still a bestseller in china is now in english translation it s the early eighties rural china begins a slow forever change begins to turn away from the munity and culture of eons and we meet gao jialin the educated son of peasants

Left wing literary debates shifted to popular forms in the colloquial language which would be accessible to china s rural and urban masses as well as to an educated urban elite this was the forerunner of the popularization strategy that mao as national leader would apply wholeheartedly to the nation s literature from 1949 to his death in 1976. This article draws on data from research that includes 400 children who lived separately from their migrant parents in 10 rural munities in china to explore the deep impacts of rural parents migration on the care giving and nurturing of children left behind it shows that parent migration has brought about multiple impacts mostly negative on the lives of children such as increased.
