“È terribile voler andarsene e non voler andare da nessuna parte”, disse Sylvia Plath. È ciò che pensa Hayra Mason, una diciassettenne che combatte ogni giorno contro i suoi pensieri, le sue convenzioni, le sue idee. Essere adolescenti non è facile, soprattutto quando trovi difficoltà ad inserirti nella società, farti nuovi amici, trasferirti in un posto completamente nuovo. In un mondo dove il grigio predomina sugli altri colori, Hayra conoscerà per sbaglio Hunter Black. Di lui tutti ne conoscono la fama da giocatore di basket, ne riconoscono la bellezza e il fascino, ma agli occhi di Hayra ne rappresenta un'irrefrenabile curiosità che la spinge a conoscerlo per più di qualche minuto, a parlargli anche se le parole non sembrano mai quelle giuste. È riservato, si limita a nascondersi dietro un'apparenza creata dagli altri, ma si sa che tutti indossano una maschera per autodifesa... E scavare nei ricordi e nella mente di una persona può rivelarsi estremamente pericoloso. Ci sono cose che dovrebbero essere dimenticate, seppellite, nascoste. Ci sono persone che dovrebbero essere trattenute, non lasciate dissolversi in una sfumatura di solitudine. Ci sono colori che dovrebbero essere amati. Eppure Hayra continua a volersi dissolvere nel grigio nel quale vive, finché non imparerà che a volte bisogna scendere, e cadere giù, forte come la pioggia, per poi diventare arcobaleno. A meno che non si decida di amare soltanto un colore ed essere pioggia per sempre...
