Universalmente riconosciuto come il più grande architetto d'America, Frank Lloyd Wright (1867-1959) è stato un autentico pioniere, sia a livello artistico sia tecnico. In un'epoca in cui il cemento armato e l'acciaio erano considerati materiali propri dell'edilizia industriale, Wright compì la scelta coraggiosa di utilizzarli per costruire case private. Il concept delle prairie houses - abitazioni basse e a pianta irregolare basata su una semplice forma a Loat- è stato il punto di partenza per realizzare alcune delle sue case più famose ed è diventato un modello per l'architettura rurale in tutta l'America. I progetti di Wright per edifici pubblici e di uffici furono altrettanto unici e all'avanguardia. Dalla Casa sulla cascata al Guggenheim Museum di New York, le sue opere sono tra le più famose nella storia dell'architettura.
