L'œuvre de l'artiste canadien Jeff Wall a porté la photographie au premier plan de l'art contemporain. Wall exploite une technologie cinématographique et informatique avancée dans un travail évoquant, par la composition, l'échelle et les sujets traités, celui de peintres tels Vélasquez, Goya et Manet. Ses cibachromes gigantesques montés sur des caissons lumineux associent l'éclat séduisant d'un écran de cinéma à la présence physique de la sculpture minimaliste. Ses mises en scène soigneusement composées décrivent les rapports sociaux quotidiens ; elles explorent les forces obscures que dissimule la façade brillante, saturée par les médias, du XXe siècle finissant. Tous ces éléments - peinture figurative traditionnelle, cinéma, minimalisme, art conceptuel, photographie documentaire - sont consciemment évoqués et explorés dans le travail de Jeff Wall. Étroitement associé depuis la fin des années 1960 à des artistes conceptuels comme Dan Graham, avec qui il a réalisé le Pavillon des enfants (1988-1993), Wall s'est engagé à un niveau élevé dans le débat sur les théories de la représentation et sur la dimension sociale de cette dernière, tant dans son art que par ses écrits théoriques sur la culture et l'art contemporains. D'importantes expositions sur l'œuvre de Jeff Wall ont été présentées au Museum of Contemporary Art de Chicago (1995) ; à la galerie nationale du Jeu de Paume à Paris (1995) ; au musée d'Art moderne d'Helsinki (1996) ; à la Whitechapel Art Gallery de Londres (1996) ; au musée d'Art contemporain de Montréal (1999) et à la Tate Modern de Londres (2005). L'essai de Thierry de Duve, auteur de " Nominalisme pictural " et de " The Definitely Unfinished Marcel Duchamp ", propose une autre histoire du modernisme. La critique et commissaire d'expositions Arielle Péleuc s'entretient avec l'artiste de thèmes allant du récit à la cinématographie. Boris Groys, auteur de Contemporary Art from Moscow, traite de la signification de la lumière dans l'œuvre de Jeff Wall. Dans la section Actualisation, le critique d'art et historien de la photographie Jean-François Chevrier s'attache aux œuvres de Jeff Wall réalisées entre 1995 et 2001. L'artiste a choisi des textes de Blaise Pascal et de Franz Kafka. En incluant certains de ses textes et entretiens les plus significatifs, cet ouvrage rend également hommage à Jeff Wall en tant qu'historien et théoricien de l'art.
