"Pressestimmen 'Toddlers will love shouting out whether they can eat such delicacies as 'Pinecone / Telephone / Panettone / Pony' as they page through the witty pictures.'--The Wall Street Journal Online'A delightfully fun board book that asks you what sorts of things can be eaten, told in rhyme. I also adore the illustrations in Can You Eat - they are gorgeous. This is board book as art kind of stuff.'--Baby Librarians'A delightfully whimsical look at what is food and what isn't: 'A pea, a pear? A bee, a bear?' The artwork is gorgeous enough to be reproduced as a print to be hung in a kitchen. A little silly, a lot fun, and very, very pretty.'--Book Riot'Lovely illustrations and whimsical wordplay.'--Kirkus Reviews'Whimsical wordplay will enchant older toddlers as they ponder whether they can eat a moose, chocolate mousse, or a mouse. Rothman's sophisticated illustrations will be a hit with adults, too.'--School Library Journal e-newsletter'Presents an excellent array of vocabulary words and international foods in a format that makes an enjoyable point-and-say book for the very young. Older readers will appreciate the wordplay and humor too. The gouache artwork is light and bright (imagine key lime, prickly pear, and orange sherbet), and the objects are clear and appealing.'--The Reading Chair Über den Autor und weitere Mitwirkende Joshua David Stein (@fakejoshstein) is an acclaimed food critic, and film and culture columnist.
