"Buchrückseite The Whig historian studies the past with reference to the present. He looks for agency in history. And, in his search for origins and causes, he can easily select those facts that give support to his thesis and thus eliminate other facts equally important to the total picture. The Whig historian tends to judge, to make history answer questions, and to overdramatize by simplification and organization around attractive themes. The value of history, however, as Professor Butterfield shows, lies in the richness of its recovery of the concrete life of the past. The true historian studies the past for its own sake. He sees 'in each generation a clash of wills out of which there emerges something that probably now man ever willed, ' and his creative work is to make the past intelligible to the present by insight and sympathy with the conditions of the past."

In 1931 a Cambridge don Herbert Butterfield published the Whig Interpretation of History. The Whig historian Butterfield said is a bad historian because in embracing the British Whigs' faith in freedom he studies the past not for its own sake but with reference to the present in concentrating on the consequences for liberty of the acts of revolutionary statesmen. The Whig

Central to the Whig interpretation of history was the long conflict between crown and parliament that dominated the seventeenth century while they regretted the bloodshed of the civil war and the execution of King Charles I.
